The CIA's Un-Medal

One of the frustrations of life in the CIA is that one's achievements can seldom be celebrated, except in a very small circle. Thus it was probably to be expected that in honoring U-2 pilot Francis Gary Powers, the organization would, as it did recently, stage a secret ceremony to present him with a medal he can't wear.

One question remains. What does this concealed decoration look like? Perhaps it bears, on one side, the inscription "U-2," and on the other side the words, "Who, Me?"
